Hill Museum & Manuscript Library

The Hill Museum & Manuscript Library (HMML) is a global organization that advances manuscript research and scholarly inquiry by digitally preserving, providing access to and interpreting manuscript collections from around the world. HMML places a special priority on manuscripts from regions endangered by war, political instability or other threats.

HMML is currently preserving manuscript collections at sites in Croatia, Egypt, Iraq, Italy, Jerusalem, Lebanon, Mali, Malta and Yemen. With more than 540 partner libraries worldwide, HMML holds the world’s largest collection of resources for the study of manuscript cultures both east and west. These manuscripts are available through the new HMML Reading Room at vhmml.org.

Illuminations is a publication of the Hill Museum & Manuscript Library and is published for scholars and friends of HMML twice a year.

I joined my HMML colleague Dr. Anton Pritula, lead cataloger of Eastern Christian manuscripts, at the Symposium Syriacum in Rome in August. Read more about the conference in the News section on page 13. Photo courtesy of the Pontifical Oriental Institute, Rome.

In mid-August when vHMML Reading Room went live, I was at an international conference of Syriac and Christian Arabic scholars. Word spread quickly about the instant availability of many of our recently-digitized manuscripts from the Middle East, and I was asked to do a spontaneous live demonstration at a plenary session on the final day. The aesthetics of the site, the range of resources, and the quality of the images actually caused gasps around the room. With vHMML Reading Room, the full import of what we have been working on since 2003 finally came home to one of our key scholarly audiences.

The vision for HMML’s new online future was born in 2011, at a time when the study of manuscript skills was under threat in universities around the world even as scholars had growing expectations of immediate access to the materials they needed for their research. We had little idea at the beginning how steep the learning curve would be and how much the project would demand in time and talent. There were moments along the way when we wondered if we could pull it off. Thanks to the support of many friends around the world, we brought it home. When we began work on vHMML five years ago, Syria was at peace and the Christian and Yazidi residents of northern Iraq were still living in their ancient cities and villages. We knew then that our work was important; we could not possibly have known how crucial it would prove to be for the preservation of unique manuscripts now lost forever or out of reach for many years to come. When you visit vHMML Reading Room, think of the present-day peoples descended from those who wrote and treasured those manuscripts, and pray for peace.

Sincerely,

Columba Stewart OSB
Executive Director
Since 1965, HMML has worked with scholars, librarians, teachers, curators, religious leaders and government officials around the world to ensure that written documents from endangered cultural communities will not be lost. During HMML’s five decades, photography changed from microfilm to digital, while finding aids evolved from card catalogs to printed catalogs, then to CD-ROM disks and finally OLIVER, the database that first brought HMML online in the late 1990s.

As technology has changed, so have the needs of researchers. HMML needed to go further with its online research tools and make its vast manuscript collection more readily accessible to scholars. In October 2015, HMML launched a new and comprehensive resource for manuscript studies, vHMML or “Virtual HMML.” A crucial extension of vHMML, vHMML Reading Room, went live at the end of this summer.

vHMML Reading Room gives registered users access to HMML’s photographic manuscript archives from around the world. The initial collections available in vHMML Reading Room include representative samples of HMML’s diverse microfilm and digital resources, including images from Europe, Africa, the Middle East, and India. Highlights include manuscripts from Iraq and the famed Timbuktu manuscripts of Mali.

Over 6,000 complete manuscripts in thirty languages are now in vHMML Reading Room, with collections being added on a weekly basis. vHMML Reading Room includes many functions, including the ability to zoom in on a specific text or image on a manuscript page. The most minute details can be viewed and studied in-depth. The manuscript is from the Cathedral Museum in Mdina, Malta, HMML Project Number CMMSS 00004.
Room lets users search for manuscripts by country, repository, author, language, genre, date, features, city or even script. Even uncataloged collections will be hosted in vHMML Reading Room, lowering all barriers to scholarly access. Users can contribute cataloging metadata using a simple tool only a click away. Researchers can view a highly-zoomable single page or view the manuscript as a larger whole.

HMML Executive Director Fr. Columba Stewart, observes, “Scholarship already lives in a digital environment. At HMML, we follow the Benedictine tradition of using the best available technology to preserve the past, as monks did in the 15th century when printing was invented, and as the founders of HMML did in 1965 by using microfilm to preserve endangered manuscripts. vHMML helps a new generation of scholars learn the skills they need to read these precious witnesses to human history, and vHMML Reading Room makes those witnesses immediately available to a global audience.”

vHMML Reading Room is one component of vHMML. vHMML's other features help users understand and interpret manuscripts. vHMML School offers tutorials in the sciences of paleography and codicology, with lessons in Latin and Syriac already available, Arabic coming very soon, and other languages in development. vHMML Folio provides richly described manuscript pages from communities around the globe and across the ages, highlighting the changing history of scripts in these traditions. vHMML Lexicon introduces terms used in manuscript studies, and vHMML Reference contains bibliographical resources searchable by keyword, title, or author’s last name.

Over its multi-year development, the project has been supported by several generous grants: initial funding for vHMML came from the Institute for Museum and Library Services (IMLS) and Arcadia; vHMML Reading Room was funded by the Henry Luce Foundation, and the new catalog database by the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation.

Users can find vHMML at www.vhmml.org. Due to agreements with owning libraries, users will need to register before using the collection for the first time, but it is an easy, free and one-time process. Register directly at https://www.vhmml.org/registration.

“We’re very proud of the work the HMML staff has done on vHMML Reading Room – and the future that this research tool makes possible,” says Fr. Columba. “vHMML Reading Room is poised to become the world’s largest online collection of manuscript images, and certainly the most culturally comprehensive. It is a wonderful testament to the 50-year legacy of HMML – and an exciting new chapter for HMML’s next 50 years.”
For Erin Galgay Walsh, researching at HMML with the support of a Heckman stipend in July 2016 was not only productive, but surprising. Walsh, currently a PhD candidate at Duke University in religious studies, studies Greek and Syriac liturgical poetry. HMML has the largest collection of manuscripts of the poetry of Narsai, the fifth-century Syriac author who is the focus of her research. Previously, Walsh has also consulted manuscripts housed at the British Library and the Vatican. Her research time at HMML was even more fruitful than she had hoped, and she admitted that she should have applied for a longer stay.

“I was looking through manuscripts for my project and I found material for another project,” said Walsh. “Because I had the time to do it, I found texts I was not aware of in Garshuni as well as Syriac. That’s the value of being in the environment at HMML. It’s almost like a retreat.”

Walsh was also able to collaborate with other Eastern Christian and Syriac scholars, learn more about manuscript research, and dedicate time to her project without distractions.

Dr. Ephrem Aboud Ishac has a similar story. His previous Heckman stipend at HMML was a transformative experience that helped define the course of his career as an academic. Ishac first studied at HMML from August to September 2011, and was then a PhD student at the University of the Holy Spirit, Kaslik, in Lebanon.

“As a junior doctoral researcher, the Heckman stipend was like a bridge, as I was able to study very important oriental manuscripts,” said Ishac. “I am really indebted to HMML.”

Established in 1991 by his children, grandchildren and friends, the A.A. Heckman fund at HMML is named after Al Heckman, who dedicated his life to philanthropic organizations in St. Paul and throughout Minnesota. Heckman first became involved with HMML in its fledging years. Heckman served as HMML’s first chair of the Board of Overseers and continued in service to HMML for more than 25 years.

Rob Culligan, now vice president of institutional advancement at Saint John’s University, joined HMML’s staff as development director in 1994 and worked with Heckman’s family and friends to establish the Heckman fund. Heckman’s vision – and commitment to HMML’s mission – was a driving force behind the fund.

“Heckman liked to help young people to get established. He wanted to support emerging scholars,” says Culligan. “His vision was also strategic: If we can get young scholars to become acquainted with the heckman fund at hmml is designed to provide stipends to scholars who have not yet established themselves professionally and whose research cannot progress satisfactorily without consulting materials to be found in the hmml’s collections. the stipends are awarded semi-annually and can cover anything related to a scholar’s travel, housing, meals, research cost at hmml. the stipend can be up to $2,000.

heckman stipends are just one of four different stipends hmml offers. scholars can also apply for the nicky b. carpenter fellowship in manuscript studies, swenson family fellowships in eastern christian manuscript studies for junior scholars, and the dietrich reinhart, osb, fellowship in eastern christian manuscript studies.

more detailed information on the application process can be found at: http://www.hmml.org/fellowships--stipends--internships.html
Where We’re Working

Al-Budeiry Library and Al-Khalidi Library, Jerusalem

By Elizabeth Reisinger

A crossroads of cultures, the Old City of Jerusalem holds great meaning for Jews, Christians and Muslims. The three faith traditions have been intertwined throughout the city’s long and complex history—a history that has been handwritten in centuries-old manuscript collections that until now have been unavailable.

HMML’s first manuscript digitization project in Jerusalem began in 2011 at Dayro d-Mor Marqos, Saint Mark’s Monastery, a Syrian Orthodox monastery located in the Christian Quarter of the Old City of Jerusalem. Their collection contained over 350 manuscripts and took about a year to digitize.

Soon after, HMML began digitizing the private libraries of two prominent families in Jerusalem’s Muslim community: the Al-Budeiry Library and the Al-Khalidi Library. Both are located in the heart of the Old City near the al-Aqsa Mosque, one of the holiest sites for Muslims in Jerusalem. These are the first completely Islamic collections HMML has digitized in its five decades of work.

The Al-Budeiry family collection, which totals 1,177 manuscripts, was acquired over many generations of the family. “It’s a family endowment, founded by the Al-Budeiry family in the 18th century, with each new generation taking over the responsibility of the library,” said David Dahdal, HMML’s field director in Jerusalem.

Some of the manuscripts within the collection are 400 to 650 years old. Several of the documents are unique manuscripts with no extant copies. Like many of the collections that HMML digitizes, the texts cover a wide range of subjects, such as religious documents, legal archives, poetry and mathematics. “It’s one of the most important and unique private collections in Jerusalem,” said Dahdal. “Many of the texts tell the story of Jerusalem as a holy place for Muslims – documenting the Islamic period in a descriptive way, and most of them are descriptive texts for Jerusalem history as well.”

Dahdal trained family member and curator of the library, Shaima Budeiry, in digitizing techniques. With her one-camera studio, she was able to digitize the collection in approximately three years. The images are LEFT: This manuscript, dated 1722, is a treatise on prayers for the Prophet Muḥammad. The rich assortment of colors and the ornate Maghribi calligraphic style are appropriate for the theme of using language to praise the Prophet. HMML Project Number ABLJ 00465.

Digitization of the Al-Khalidi Library is ongoing. The Al-Khalidi family established the library in 1900. Like the Al-Budeiry collection, the Al-Khalidi family accumulated their collection over several generations. With over 2,000 manuscripts on Islamic theology, philosophy and other subjects, it is the largest private collection of manuscripts in Jerusalem today. Most of the works are written in Arabic, with a few in Persian or Turkish. The oldest dated item is an Islamic historic document from the 10th century.

HMML recently completed work at the Dar Issaaf Nashashibi Library, an Islamic research library that houses a collection of over 800 manuscripts written in Arabic, Ottoman and Turkish, the oldest of which dates back to the 12th century. A smaller Islamic collection at the Dar Sheikh Abdul Aziz Al-Bukhari Library consisting of 50 manuscripts has recently been digitized under Dahdal’s direction. Once cataloged, the images from both collections will be added to the HMML Reading Room.

“The collections HMML is digitizing reveal the richly varied faith traditions and a history that goes back many centuries,” said Dahdal. “They help us look at our own more recent history and traditions with a new perspective.”

The Al-Budeiry Library is a small, three-room building in the Old City. As in many HMML fieldwork sites, lighting controls are necessary for proper digitization.
HMML in the News

HMML’s preservation work was the subject of an August feature article in The National, an English-language newspaper published in Abu Dhabi, United Arab Emirates. Journalist Matteo Fagotto and photographer Matilde Gattoni chronicled HMML Executive Director Fr. Columba Stewart’s summer 2016 visit to HMML’s fieldwork sites in the Old City of Jerusalem, where HMML is currently digitizing two Islamic manuscript collections. Find a link to the article online on our homepage, www.hmml.org.

HMML’s Malta Study Center was featured in the online newspaper Malta Today. The September 28, 2016 article highlighted HMML’s partnership with the Fondazzjoni Patrimonju Malti (FPM). The FPM is a non-profit heritage organization that works with several of Malta’s private manuscript libraries. Find a link to the article online on our homepage, www.hmml.org.

HMML in the Community:
HMML Annual Millennium Club and Legacy Society Lecture

On Wednesday September 21, Jesuit priest and scholar, Dr. Michael Suarez, director of the Rare Book School at the University of Virginia, presented the 2016 Annual Millennium Club and Legacy Society Lecture at the James J. Hill Library in Saint Paul, Minnesota. Over eighty people attended the lecture entitled “How Does Your Garden Grow? Ecosystems of Reading and the Need for Futuristic Cultivation.” Millennium Club members give a minimum of $1,000 annually and Legacy Society members have included HMML in their estate plans. Readers can find a link to Dr. Suarez’s lecture on the HMML home page, www.hmml.org.

Minnesota Manuscript Research Laboratory

The annual Minnesota Manuscript Research Laboratory (MMRL) took place at HMML from May 30 through June 3. MMRL is a project developed by the Center for Medieval Studies (CMS) of the Institute for Advanced Study in the College of Liberal Arts, University of Minnesota–Twin Cities. This is the 12th year that HMML has co-sponsored the week-long laboratory. The workshop was led by Dr. Carin Ruff of Washington, DC, with contributions by HMML curators Dr. Daniel Gullo and Dr. Matthew Heintzelman, providing practical guidance and training in the areas of manuscript text studies, text editing, paleography and codicology.

The workshop is open to undergraduate and graduate students from any institution as well as to faculty, independent scholars and other individuals who have a background in classics, medieval studies, or library studies, and are interested in manuscript studies.

Father Columba on Research Leave

Fr. Columba is in residence at the School of Historical Studies at the Institute for Advanced Study in Princeton, New Jersey, during the 2016-2017 academic year. He is completing his book, “Between Earth and Heaven: Interpreting the First Thousand Years of Christian Monasticism.” His leave coincides with his recent Guggenheim Fellowship from the John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation. Fr. Columba will remain engaged in HMML’s international preservation work throughout his time in Princeton and will return to HMML in June 2017.
Dumbarton Oaks/HMML Syriac Summer School

In summer 2016, HMML hosted an intensive four-week Syriac language and paleography class for 10 doctoral students or recent PhDs who demonstrated a need to learn Syriac for their research. The summer school, sponsored and funded by Dumbarton Oaks, included a long weekend in Washington, D.C., to visit Dumbarton Oaks and other institutions in the area to learn more about their resources for Byzantine and Eastern Christian studies.

Taught by Dr. Scott Johnson, University of Oklahoma (Syriac language), and Dr. Adam McCollum, University of Vienna (Syriac manuscripts), the summer school consisted of morning and afternoon sessions Monday-Friday, complemented by guest lectures and other learning opportunities, as well as social events and enjoyment of Saint John’s University’s Collegeville campus.

Each morning session was devoted to the study of Syriac language, and each afternoon session provided an orientation in the reading of Syriac manuscripts of all periods from the major script-types. Materials were drawn from HMML’s vast collection of digitized Syriac manuscripts, and students had the opportunity to hone and challenge their language skills while gaining a foundational experience in deciphering Syriac manuscripts from various communities and time periods.

Dumbarton Oaks Research Library and Collection is an institute in Washington, D.C., administered by the Trustees for Harvard University. It supports research and learning internationally in Byzantine, Garden and Landscape, and Pre-Columbian studies through fellowships and internships, meetings, and exhibitions.

Catholic University of America Order of Malta Digitization Project

HMML’s Malta Study Center signed an agreement with Catholic University of America (CUA) to digitize the Maltese manuscript collections in CUA’s Rare Books and Special Collections. The collections hold over 200 manuscripts and document the Order of Malta’s history from the late 17th through the early 19th century. The project digitized two major collections that were gifted to CUA: the Carol Saliba gift in 1994 and the Foster-Stearns gift in the 1950s. Both collections have been inventoried, but neither has been fully cataloged. Digitization of the CUA Order of Malta collections took place in October 2016. Watch HMML’s website for online availability of these two collections.

The digitization process took six days at CUA’s Rare Book and Special Collections in Washington, D.C.

HMML and James Ford Bell Library exhibition: “The Bembos of Venice: Merchants, Diplomats, and a Knight of Malta”

The University of Minnesota James Ford Bell Library featured HMML materials in the exhibition, “The Bembos of Venice: Merchants, Diplomats, and a Knight of Malta.” The exhibition is on display September 12, 2016 through January 13, 2017, at the University of Minnesota, James Ford Bell Library. The Bell Library hosted a reception and guest lecture on October 27 where HMML’s Dr. Daniel Gullo presented “A Knight of the Italian Renaissance: Pietro Bembo and the Order of Malta.”
New Cataloger for HMML’s Eastern Christian Collection

David Calabro, PhD, joined HMML in August as the new cataloging fellow for Eastern Christian manuscripts. Calabro specializes in Christian Arabic, Syriac, and Coptic. Before coming to HMML, Calabro earned a doctorate in Near Eastern Languages and Literatures at the University of Chicago. From 2014 to 2016, he was a researcher and editor at the Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship at Brigham Young University. He has published several articles on the languages and cultures of the Near East. He has also taught courses on Near Eastern languages and literature at the Catholic Theological Union in Chicago and at Brigham Young University. His fellowship is funded by the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation as part of its grant to develop a new and enriched catalog database for HMML Reading Room.

HMML Exhibition: “Knights, Memory, and the Siege of 1565”

The James Ford Bell Library at the University of Minnesota-Twin Cities hosted HMML’s Malta Study Center’s traveling exhibition, "Knights, Memory, and the Siege of 1565: An Exhibition on the 450th Anniversary of the Great Siege of Malta," from June 1 until August 19, 2016.

The exhibition featured more than twenty original rare books and manuscripts narrating the history of the conflict between the Order of Saint John of Jerusalem and the Ottoman Turks from the 1480 Siege of Rhodes, through the Great Siege of Malta in 1565. William Zammit, senior lecturer at the University of Malta, gave a short presentation on the exhibition at a reception hosted by the Bell Library on July 7.

HMML Symposia

HMML’s Malta Study Center hosted the 2016 Mediterranean Seminar Fall Workshop on November 11-12 at HMML. The Mediterranean Seminar was held in conjunction with the Mediterranean Studies Research Collaborative, Center for Medieval Studies, Center for Early Modern History, and Consortium for the Study of the Premodern World at the University of Minnesota-Twin Cities.

The seminar included a one-day academic workshop, “Magic, Medicine, and Technology in the Mediterranean” on Friday, November 11. Scholars were invited to submit papers on relevant disciplines, especially comparative or interdisciplinary work that uses the Mediterranean as a frame of analysis and addresses the topics of magic, science, or medicine. Dr. Monica Green of Arizona State University gave the plenary lecture, “Orientis et Occidentis magister: Constantinus Africanus and His Manuscript Legacy.”

On Saturday, November 12, participants attended a one-day colloquium, “Magic, Science, and Medicine in the Pre-Modern Mediterranean” that included round-table discussions on disease, hospitals and care in the Mediterranean; scientific exchange in the Mediterranean; and magic and dissimulation in Mediterranean society.

Discussants and presenters for the two-day seminar included scholars from around the world, including Christ’s College in Cambridge, University of California-Santa Cruz, and UCLA.
HMML at Conferences

HMML’s lead cataloger of Eastern Christian manuscripts, Dr. Anton Pritula, and Fr. Columba Stewart attended the Symposium Syriacum in Rome in August. The annual symposium gathers Syriac scholars from around the world. Fr. Columba presented a paper on his current research, “The Syriac versions of Evagrius’ Gööstikos and their relevance for the study of translation in Late Antiquity.” Dr. Pritula presented the paper, “East Syriac poetry collections of the Mongol time according to the earliest existing manuscripts: a general typology.” Dr. Pritula and Fr. Columba also gave attendees an impromptu demonstration of eHMML Reading Room.

Following the Symposium in Rome, Fr. Columba and Dr. Pritula were the leading presenters at a workshop on digital manuscript portals sponsored by the Center for the Study of Manuscript Cultures at the University of Hamburg, Germany.

In September, Dr. Matthew Heintzelman, curator of the Austria / Germany Collection and cataloger of rare books, attended the annual meeting of Digital Scriptorium at Harvard University. The Digital Scriptorium is a consortium of libraries and museums committed to free online access to their collections of pre-modern manuscripts. Dr. Heintzelman presented an overview of eHMML Reading Room to approximately a dozen attendees who work with rare book, manuscript and related materials at institutions including Harvard University, Yale University and Columbia University.

Dr. Heintzelman also presented a lecture at the Medieval Association of the Midwest (MAM) conference in Duluth in early October. MAM is an interdisciplinary association of medievalists in the Midwest that promotes the study, criticism, research, and exchange of ideas related to all aspects of the medieval period and to articulate the specific needs of medievalists in the Midwest. Dr. Heintzelman’s lecture highlighted recent acquisitions in HMML’s rare book collection.

In June, Eileen Smith, HMML metadata librarian, attended the Rare Books and Manuscripts Section (RBMS) Conference of the Association of College and Research Libraries (ACRL), a division of the American Library Association (ALA). Smith presented a poster session about HMML’s global preservation work, focusing on HMML’s partnerships and collaborations with libraries and institutions.

HMML & Syriac Manuscripts: New Exhibition at HMML

Syriac Manuscripts were the subject of a HMML exhibition this summer, featuring the first printed Syriac New Testament (1555) and other rare early printed books, as well as manuscript leaves and historic artifacts representing Syriac cultures ranging across the Middle East to India.

Syriac Christianity dates back to the 1st century A.D. The Syriac language is a dialect of Middle Aramaic that was spoken across the Near East during Late Antiquity and the Middle Ages. During this time, the Syriac Christians authored an abundance of manuscripts pertaining to history, science, literature, philosophy and religion.

“The exhibition highlighted HMML’s digitization process of Syriac manuscripts.”

“Preserving the linguistic and liturgical traditions of Syriac Christians became a priority for HMML in 2006, when globalization, wars and religious intolerance began to threaten historic Syriac Christian communities in the Middle East and India,” said Fr. Columba Stewart, OSB, executive director of HMML. “By digitizing, cataloging and archiving these unique witnesses to human creativity and cultural identity, HMML is keeping the Syriac language, literary and liturgical traditions and histories alive and accessible forever.”

Since 2003, HMML has digitized over 13,500 manuscripts belonging to Syriac communities in Lebanon, Syria, Turkey, Iraq, and India.

Philanthropy Report
Fiscal Year 2016 | July 1, 2015 – June 30, 2016

In fiscal year 2016, HMML was awarded a $4 million grant from Arcadia Fund—the largest gift in its fifty-one year history. The grant will support HMML’s digitization, archiving and cataloging of endangered manuscript collections through 2021. In addition, Arcadia’s funding will make these digitized materials freely available to worldwide users through HMML’s online eHMML Reading Room.

HMML also recorded its largest annual fund in fiscal year 2016—over $327,000. The financial support we receive from foundations, organizations, corporations and individuals is vital to helping HMML preserve the manuscript heritage of countries affected by war, looting and emigration. Thank you!
